Education's in trouble in B.C.

but most people in the community are only vaguely aware of the issues involved. If we are to convince the provincial government to increase educational funding for this college we must have the support of the community, and to this end the Anti-Cutback Team has organized a Community Outreach Day. Details, page 2.

DON'T APPLAUD

just throw money, may be the sentiment of the students on the Dean's List, but they're just going to have to settle for applause. Find out who Cap's top students are, page 3

McLaren showing at the Rembrandt

Opening next week, Monday March 8th from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and continuing through March 20 is an exhibition at the Rembrandt Gallery by an ex-student of the College. Barbara Barron was one of Donna McLaren's art student in the early '70's who has recently built herself a gas kiln and is working with porcelain. Donna McLaren will also have her work on display, and if you haven't seen her whimsical pieces such as a farm train, elephants, lions, cats and birds, we can recommend them highly. The Rembrandt is on the west side of Lonsdale between 13th and 14th -- drop in. Gallery hours Saturday.

Tidings from R.M.

News from the Retail Merchandising department: Pam Salusbury gave a comprehensive 'Metric Workshop' to the RM students several weeks ago. About 25 students attended this fourth hour enrichment--Hilary Clark says they're interested in gaining metric information which will be so necessary in their professional lives.

YOUR help is needed

You are needed to participate in Community Outreach Day Saturday March 6th. Students, faculty, and staff will be distributing a provincial leaflet on education budget cutbacks and how they affect Capilano College. Naturally they need help. They are asking everyone to join them for a couple of hours to help publicize the situation of the College in five shopping malls, at the Seabus terminal and at Phibbs Exchange in three hour shifts. The shifts, from 10 am to 1 pm and 1 to 4 pm will be worked by pairs so no one will have to work alone. After the day's activities there will be a discussion of how things went, future planning and a party for the workers on Saturday night. It's going to be a big job and they need a lot of help -- if you can work a shift at Park Royal, Capilano Mall, Westview, Westlynn, Dollarton, the Seabus, or Phibbs Exchange, give your name and phone number to the Student Society or the Info Centre.

Andrea Kiss takes over

The new coordinator of the Squamish WRC, Andrea Kiss, has been teaching the Career Alternatives Program at the college since that program started in 1974, and in Squamish for the last two years. She's teaching women how to get back into the workforce after years at home and she understands the problem well herself. She has two teenaged children and returned to work herself after seven years as a full-time homemaker. Also involved in women's issues Andrea was the first chairperson of the North Shore Women's Centre. The position of coordinator is part-time so she'll have time to pursue her studies at UBC where she's working on her Master's degree in Counselling Psychology.

Classified

TEACHER WANTED: Co-operative pre-school, North Vancouver District, for September am/pm program, 3 & 4 year old children. Applicants must be fully qualified and registered with Community Care Facilities. Must have certificate in Early Childhood Education.

Why work for an "A"?

The straight A student often has moments of wondering why s/he bothers. After all, what is the significance of a letter? You toil away morning, afternoon and night and get a good mark and who notices? The computer. Where's the money, the fame and the bright lights? And for academic students on a University Transfer program, those wonderful grade point averages don't even transfer to university with you--you start out from scratch there. (Of course, this can also be a blessing, depending on how you're doing...) At any rate in an attempt to provide a little well deserved fame for those hardworking students at the college, we are hereby publishing the Dean's List and the Merit List, the roster of those full-time and part-time students, respectively, who attained a 3.5 or better grade point average in the fall semester. We applaud you.

Singing the traditional music

In the "old days" in Quebec there were fiddlers and accordianists, but most singing was done with only the accompaniment of foot-tapping or hand-clapping. This traditional art of mouth music--singing reels ballads and laments spontaneously and without accompaniment--is the specialty of Breton-Cyr, the group performing Sunday night. Gaetane Breton and Richard Cyr began their musical career almost by accident. Breton, who sang a bit, signed up for Superfrancofete in 1974 but found herself without a pianist. She asked a friend to join her - Cyr - but it turned out that he knew little about music either and couldn't play. In Richard's family the tradition of singing the old songs accompanied by foot-tapping was strong, so the two decided to sing a few old folk songs at the festival and they were immediately popular. They were "discovered" and their career was launched. Breton and Cyr sing the traditional music and spend a lot of time collecting songs by travelling around Quebec and exploring almost every corner of that province. Since they need little equipment, they have been able to work in remote places (such as the James Bay Hydro Project) and often when they play in small villages people will come up to them after the performance and tell them about a relative or oldtimer in the district who remembers old songs. The fascination of the folk songs for Breton and Cyr lies both in the original rhythms, and in the words, many of which came originally from France and have been transformed over years of being handed down in an oral tradition. Audiences often join in the catchy tunes and sing along, recapturing the warm and spontaneous atmosphere of the original gatherings that enjoyed the music.
